

ABSTRACT

A method of receiving a network resource address and creating a copy of the network resource and storing the created copy in a database is provided. This creation and storage of a copy of the network resource is performed when there does not exist, in the database, information derived from the resource pointed to by the network address.